The latest in transplanting body parts

Lindsay Ess is one of the luckiest women alive. First, she survived a serious infection when she was in her twenties. Then, four years later, she had a double hand transplant to replace the hands that she lost to the infection – she received the hands of another person. Only 70 people in the world have received a full new replacement hand, and Lindsay is one of the few who has two. But the process hasn't been easy for her.

Before Lindsay had the operation, she had to have a lot of tests. The doctors needed to know that she was healthy enough for the operation and that she could take the drugs that were necessary to stop her body from rejecting the new hands. After a year of tests, they agreed to operate, but Lindsay had to wait for a donor to appear – a dead person who could give her their hands. Six months later, the hospital called with a pair of hands for her.

Two teams of six surgeons helped during Lindsay's operation: one team working on her right arm and the other on her left. First, they attached the bones in Lindsay's arms to the bones in the new hands. Then they started work joining the arteries and veins together. Finally, they connected all the other parts, including the skin. When Lindsay woke up nearly twelve hours later, she had a new pair of hands.

At first, Lindsay couldn't move her new hands, so she had to have therapy to learn how to use them. She spent five hours a day with a therapist, who started by moving her hands for her. Three months after the transplant, Lindsay moved her fingers by herself for the first time and she began to think of the hands as her own.

Now in her thirties, Lindsay can do most of the things that people generally do with their hands. She lives by herself, she has a dog and she drives, but she still can't quite put up her hair at the back. She'll probably continue having therapy forever, but for Lindsay, this is a small price to pay. The transplant has completely transformed her life, this time for the better.

Spain's blogging granny was a huge success

'No one listens to old people,' said Maria Amelia Lopez on her blog. But she was wrong. A lot of people listened to her. When she died, aged ninety-seven, Lopez was thought to be the world's oldest blogger and she was certainly one of the most successful. Her first post was made on her ninety-fifth birthday. It read: 'Today it's my birthday and my grandson, who is very stingy, gave me a blog.'

A later post reads: 'Since that day I've had 1,570,784 visits from bloggers from five continents who have cheered up my old age.' From cleaning ladies in Brazil to the Spanish president, people have enjoyed reading what Lopez had to say. She was funny and friendly and she had some strong opinions. 'Old people need to wake up a bit,' she said. 'You have to live life. Don't take pills and fall asleep in the armchair.'

At first, Lopez didn't know anything about computers. 'I thought a blog was a kind of paper notebook,' she said. But her grandson, Daniel, who she lived with, set up a blog for her as a birthday present. At the time he had no idea how it would change their lives. Lopez received hundreds of emails, many in languages she didn't understand. Although she had helpers, including Daniel, and friends she met on the internet, she couldn't reply to everyone.

When she was on her own, Lopez loved reading the online newspapers and chatting on the internet. She said it helped her to keep in touch with the younger generation. Teenagers wrote to Lopez to tell her about their lives and ask her for advice. She thought that everybody should use the internet. For Lopez, it was one of the best experiences of her life.
